OLE BULL, THE WIZARD.

He Knew His Public, and Played What They Wanted.

The truth is that Ole Bull was not a classical player; as I remember him, he could not play in strict tempo; like Chopin, he indulged in the rubato and abused the portamento. But he knew his public. America a half century ago, particularly in the regions he visited, was not in the mood for sonatas or concertos. "Old Dan Tucker" and the "Arkansas Traveler" were the mod. Bull played them both, played jigs and old tunes, roused the echoes with the "Star Spangled Banner" and Irish melodies. He played such things beautifully, and it would have been musical snobbery to say that you didn't like them. You couldn't help yourself. The grand old fellow bewitched you. He was a handsome Morlin, with a touch of the charlatan and a touch of Liza in his tall, willowy figure, small waist, and heavy head of hair. Such white hair! It tumbled in masses about his kindly face like one of his native Norwegian cataracts. He was the most picturesque old man I ever saw except Walt Whitman, at that time a steady attendant of the Carl Gartner String Quartet concerts in Philadelphia. (And what Walt didn't know about music he made up in his love for stray dogs; he was seldom without canine company.)—James Huneker, in the May Everybody's

WHITE GIRLS HELD IN DEN.

Were Under Spell of Negro Holy Ghosts.

New York, May 10.—Two white girls, Elida Johnson, 16, and Sigrid Sigurdson, 21, long missing from their homes, were rescued yesterday from a negro den of "Holy Ghosts."

The young women were found by the Johnson girl's brothers, who had been searching for her since her sudden disappearance three months ago.

Both girls were weak from starvation and appeared to be in a daze. They admitted living on bread and water for "religion's sake" all the time they had been away. None of the "Holy Ghosts" were arrested.

A Good Plan.

"He never told a lie," "And a very good plan that is," remarked the citizen of the world. "I myself, never tell a lie that doesn't sound perfectly reasonable."—Kansas City Journal.

"The Orange Grower's Daughter" at the Comique to-day and to-morrow.
